Phillip Blond

Founder Director of ResPublica

---

Phillip Blond is an internationally recognised political thinker and social and economic commentator. He bridges the gap between politics and practice, offering strategic consultation and policy formation to governments, businesses and organisations across the world. Prior to entering politics and public policy he was an academic, journalist and author. As a senior lecturer in theology and philosophy he taught at the Universities of Exeter and Cumbria.

He founded ResPublica in 2009 as a non party-political research organisation offering bold new multi-disciplinary ideas. It has become one of Britain's most influential think tanks with a worldwide reputation. He is the author of Red Tory (Faber and Faber 2010) which sought to redefine the centre ground of British politics around the ideas of civil association, mutual ownership and social enterprise. The follow-on book to Red Tory will be published during 2013. His ideas have influenced the agenda around the Big Society and civil renewal, helping to redefine British and international politics.
